Report

The Civil servants mobility program – Ukraine was divided in two parts in 2015. Taking into consideration the preferences of partners in Ukraine two groups of Ukrainian civil servants arrived to the Czech Republic and Slovakia in June/July, while remaining two groups arrived to Poland and Hungary in November. The ability to respond adequately to the needs of different groups of Ukrainian civil servants proves the flexibility of the Think Visegrad platform, which was also demonstrated on a different thematic focus of each group of civil servants. The group in Prague focused on civil society, the one in Bratislava on security system reform, another one in Budapest on different issues related to the DCFTA and finally the one in Warsaw on selected aspects of public administration. The division of the topics corresponded with the agreement of the ministers of foreign affairs of the V4 countries to divide responsibilities in terms of assisting Ukraine in the implementation of important reforms.

The programme for six Ukrainian civil servants started on Monday July 6 with an introductory section on the constitution of Czech civil society in the past 25 years and its role in aggregating public interest towards society. The section was conducted by seminar coordinator Michal Vit.

The program of the seminar was structured into three major parts: a) the role of the civic sector in communicating its priorities towards the state administration as well as arranging internal structures such as the Czech Council of Youth; b) establishing a system of communication with the public and civil society from the perspective of the state administration, such as the Council of Government of the Czech Republic; and c) the creation of a regional structure of the Czech administration on the level of regions and local municipalities. Putting these dimensions together, participants were exposed to the various topics connected to the title of the seminar.

Regarding the civic sector dimension, this section was focused on prominent representatives of the sector, namely in the field of civic education and work with youths. The discussion with the director of the Czech Council of Youth, Aleš Sedláček, as well as with the director of the Center of Civic Education, Ondřej Horák, explained the process involved in the establishment of a dialogue between the state and civil society. Mr. Sedláček explained how the council advocates its interests and cooperates with its member organizations. Contrary to this, Mr. Horák focused on the developing of a civic education structure in cooperation with the state administration and NGOs.

The following day of the seminar included a lecture by the representative of the Frank Bold Foundation, Vít Šimral. He introduced the reform law on the financing of political parties in the Czech Republic with recommendations for the reform of electoral laws in Ukraine. The reform input was followed by the program director of Transparency International for the Czech Republic, Radim Budeš. His contribution utilized a comparative perspective of the fight against corruption in the Czech Republic and Ukraine. He focused mainly on the differences in perception and corruption between the two countries.

The second dimension was dedicated to representatives of the state administration responsible for creating an institutional design for communications with civil society. This was a case of three different examples: Ms. Hana Frištejnská began with the general aim of the state in its communications with civic society and its development after the 1990s. She was very eager to learn more about current reforms in Ukraine and a possible role for the Czech Republic. A different perspective on communication with the public was made by representatives of the Institute of Planning and Development of the city council of Prague. Adam Pajgrt and Petr Suška introduced the strategy of the city council in Prague which involved the participation of the public during the decision making process. An example of this method of public participation involved enlarging pedestrian areas in selected parts of Prague. During the debate, participants asked about cooperation in various EU funded projects and also in the possible introduction of this participation mechanism in Kyiv. The state administration dimension was also represented by the director of the Czech-German Future Fund, Tomáš Jelínek. Mr. Jelínek focused on placing the support of the NGO sector in a cross-border context as proof of amicable relations between Germany and the Czech Republic.

The third dimension aimed to offer a closer look at the implementation of NGO activities on a regional and local level. The group visited the Regional Council of the Liberec region. Pavel Branda and Michal Ota, representatives of the Liberec region, introduced their communication strategy with regional representation and the civic sector. In addition to this, they focused on developing international cooperation with bordering regions and the possibility of enlarging cooperation with Ukraine. Speaking about the local level, the group also visited Mníchovo Hradiště. The current mayor of the city illustrates how civic engagement can bring a real impact on the local decision-making process. The current mayor, Ondřej Lochmann, as a representative of a NGO won the 2014 local

Feedback from the participants

In overall, the program and the meetings were highly appreciated by all four groups of Ukrainian civil servants. On the other hand, there was obvious interest of the V4 experts on transformation assistance to Ukraine (offering examples of best practices), which was also demonstrated through high personal engagement of speakers during particular seminars.

Visiting civil servants actively engaged in debates and posed very concrete and specific questions at all the meetings. They appreciated a multi-dimensional character of the program, especially the fact that it combined theory and individual examples of best practice. They also expressed their desire to continue in cooperation and dialogue on some mutually interesting projects with many of the V4 experts in the future. In their feedbacks the participants emphasized that the program also provided a unique opportunity for the delegates to learn from each other. All in all, Ukrainian civil servants found the format of the IVF Civil Servants Program very practical and useful and would strongly recommend it to their colleagues in Ukraine. Some of the participants requested to organize more than one CSMP program for Ukrainian civil servants in 2016 and even recommended to mix participants from Moldova, Ukraine and Georgia. It can be concluded that a mechanism to follow-up CSMP programs would be useful for creating long-term partnerships and to have the possibility to monitor possible long-term effects of the program.
